DIVORCE DECREE

Family Law

Divorce

If you are going through a divorce, then you will have to face some tough decisions regarding property division, child custody and visitation. The Law Office of Thomas K. Mallon is here to help. We will explain the law, the issues, and what options are available for a fair settlement of your divorce.

The emotional issues inherent in a divorce proceeding make it that much more difficult to make good decisions. You need an experienced attorney on your side to guide you through the process and ensure that all of your rights are protected.

Child Custody

In a child custody case, the court will decide both legal and physical custody of the child. Legal Custody involves the care and control of a child. All decisions regarding the child are made by the person who has legal custody. Legal custody can be granted to one party (sole custody) or both parties (joint custody). Physical custody provides the right to have the child live with the person awarded custody.

In all child custody cases, family law courts will decide the matter based on what is in the best interests of the child. As a parent, you should know what your rights are concerning custody, visitation, and child support. The Law Office of Thomas K. Mallon can help you reach an agreement with the father or mother of your children to ensure that you are doing what is best for the child.

Child Support

Along with issues of child custody, is also the concern of child support. We know that ensuring that your child's needs are met is important to you. The Law Office of Thomas K. Mallon can represent you on child support issues, as a part of a divorce or separation case or as a separate matter.

Personal Injury

Personal injury refers to the area of law that seeks to protect victims who are harmed by the action or inaction of another person or entity. Personal injury is also sometimes referred to as tort law. A personal injury claim can be filed for injury incurred by an individual either physically or mentally, and it can sometimes include damage to property.

Personal Injury Liability and Damages

There are two elements in every personal injury case: liability and damages. The first element involves demonstrating that the person or entity being charged did in fact bear legal responsibility for the injury. Damages, refers to the extent or amount of injury or loss that was allegedly suffered on account of the defendant's actions or negligence.

Personal Injury Claims

Liability and damages can be established on several bases:

Negligence - When a case is filed as tort of negligence, the defendant is accused of causing the injury by failing to prevent it. An example would be an accusation that a business allowed a slip and fall injury to occur, by not properly following safety regulations. A reckless or inattentive driver who is at fault in an injury car accident may also be guilty of negligence.

Strict Liability - Under strict liability, a personal injury attorney may also bring charges against a company whose defective product is responsible for an injury. Strict liability applies whether negligence or malice was involved or not, as long as the product was being used as was intended.

Intentional Wrong - Intentional wrongs can sometimes be brought as civil, personal injury claims apart from any criminal charges the defendant may be facing.
